How to read this edition

Research closes on 23 September 2026. Individual figures and case statuses retain their own dates. This is a sourced editorial report prepared for IILA, not a judicial finding or a claim of formal adoption by its governing body.

THE INSTITUTION

Law as a public commitment

An introduction to the Iranian International Lawyers Association.

IILA describes itself as an independent, non-profit association of international lawyers registered in Switzerland. Its stated work brings together human rights, the rule of law, legal research and institutional preparation for Iran's future. [1]

Its website presents a non-partisan legal mission: rigorous research, documentation and accountability, alongside preparation for constitutional and judicial reform. These are the association's own descriptions; this report does not independently certify its registration or institutional partnerships. [1]

IRAN IS MORE THAN ITS GOVERNMENT

Iran refers here to a country and its diverse people, histories and cultures. The Islamic Republic refers to the governing state system; responsibility is attributed more specifically to courts, security agencies or named officials wherever the evidence permits.

Criticism of those institutions is not a claim about Iranian identity, Muslim identity or any ethnic or religious community. The rights of Iranians remain the starting point, including people who oppose the government, those who support it, and those who express no political position.

Independent research needs a visible standard:
attribute, verify, date and correct.

Official identity and logo: IILA website [1]. This report does not imply endorsement by the UN, Amnesty International, HRW or HRPF.

01 / LIVING STANDARDS

The household cost of a prolonged crisis

Economic pressure has several causes. A credible account must examine them together.

Tehran Grand Bazaar, 28 April 2018. Ninara / Wikimedia Commons, CC BY 2.0. Archival photograph; not evidence of current trading conditions.

The World Bank estimates that Iran's GDP contracted by 2.7% in 2025/26, the Iranian year ending 20 March 2026. Its assessment describes a combination of conflict, sanctions, social unrest, water and energy shortages, and weaker investment. This is an estimate, not a completed national-accounts audit. [3]

For households, the same assessment warns of high inflation, falling real incomes and greater poverty risks. Import disruption and damage to infrastructure intensify pressure on food supplies and economic activity. [3]

Where state priorities matter

Resources directed to regional military activity can carry an opportunity cost for public services and investment. But the sources reviewed do not quantify what share of Iran's economic deterioration is caused by external armed-group support.

The defensible conclusion is narrower: government spending priorities deserve scrutiny alongside sanctions, domestic structural problems and the damage caused by war. Assigning the whole downturn to proxy expenditure would exceed the evidence.

02 / RESOURCES & RESPONSIBILITY

Following the money

Documented sanctions actions offer evidence of networks, not a complete national budget.

In its September 2026 sanctions announcement, the US Treasury alleged that facilitators transferred hundreds of millions of dollars from the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps-Qods Force (IRGC-QF) to Hizballah between May and September 2025. It described oil-sale proceeds, front companies and exchange houses as parts of that channel. [4]

Treasury also stated that Kata'ib Hizballah receives weapons, training, funding, intelligence and logistical support from the IRGC-QF. These are attributed sanctions findings, not criminal convictions. [4]

The EU's sanctions framework addresses military support for Russia's war against Ukraine and armed groups in the Middle East and Red Sea region. The Council reports that it broadened that framework in May 2026. [5]

The term proxy describes relationships that differ by group and period. Support alone does not establish responsibility for every recipient's action. A terrorist designation must be attributed to the jurisdiction that made it.

A transfer allegation is not an audited spending total.

READING THE NUMBERS

The Treasury release also refers to more than US$2.6 billion allocated annually by Iraq to its Popular Mobilization Forces. That is Iraqi funding, not an estimate of the Islamic Republic's foreign expenditure. This report does not relabel it as money spent by Iran. [4]

03 / THE 2026 CRISIS

Unarmed people. Lethal state force.

The January killings demand accountability. The total remains unresolved.

Amnesty reported arbitrary detention, disappearances and intimidation of bereaved families following the protest killings of 8-9 January 2026. The September UN Mission found reasonable grounds to conclude that the crackdown involved crimes against humanity, including murder, imprisonment and torture. [6][7]

The Mission described security forces firing at protesters who posed no imminent threat to life. Peaceful protest cannot justify lethal force. Those responsible for unlawful killings must face independent investigation and, where evidence warrants, fair prosecution. [6]

The official record is not the full toll

The Islamic Republic government itself published a list of 3,038 people killed in early February, according to the UN Mission. The Mission believed the real toll was significantly higher but could not establish a total meeting its methodology. [6]

TIME reported that two senior health officials estimated as many as 30,000 deaths on 8-9 January. This was an attributed estimate, not a verified name-by-name count. [20]

42,000: an attributed claim

President Trump asserted 42,000 protest deaths in remarks on 30 April. That statement does not independently establish the toll, or more than 42,000 deaths on 6-7 January. This edition cannot verify that specific claim. [19]

ACCOUNTABILITY CANNOT WAIT FOR A FINAL COUNT

The Islamic Republic authorities must preserve evidence, disclose the fate of missing people and permit independent investigations. Uncertainty over the total does not negate documented crimes against humanity or the right of victims and families to justice.

04 / COUNTING RESPONSIBLY

Executions: what is verified

The claim of more than 1,000 executions since January 2026 is not substantiated by the sources reviewed.

532+

Executions recorded for January-August 2026 by Iran Human Rights [8].

82

Executions in August in the same dataset; six were women [8].

78

August executions reported by HRANA, reflecting a different dataset [9].

Iran Human Rights published its eight-month minimum on 5 September. The organization said only 10 of its 82 August cases were officially announced; it verified the other 72 through two independent sources. The gap illustrates why official announcements are incomplete. [8]

The organizations' August counts must not be added. Different reporting dates and verification methods can produce different documented minima. Nor does a partial-year minimum prove that unrecorded deaths did not occur. [8][9]

A widely circulated Amnesty headline about over 1,000 executions is dated September 2025. It cannot substantiate a claim about 2026. [10]

Public, in-prison and secret

Public execution describes the setting. An execution inside a prison is not necessarily secret, and an officially unannounced execution is not necessarily public. "Private execution" is an imprecise label and is avoided here.

The UN's September report records at least 29 executions linked to the 2025/26 protests, five carried out publicly. This is a subset defined by protest connection, not the overall national total. [6]

Amnesty documents both public executions and executions carried out without advance notice to families or lawyers. Named examples appear in the dedicated chapter on page 15. [11]

Source caution: IHR's headline and main total say 532, but one paragraph says 528 and some subtotals differ. We retain its headline minimum and do not reconcile the inconsistent figures. No full-year extrapolation.

05 / WOMEN IN PUBLIC LIFE

A voice. A choice. A place in the street.

Tehran, 11 May 2024. Ninara / Wikimedia Commons, CC BY 2.0.
Archival daily life; no identities or political activity are inferred.

HRW's World Report 2026, covering 2025, describes prosecutions over compulsory hijab, vehicle impoundment, business closures and digital surveillance. It reports suspension, rather than repeal, of the newer Hijab and Chastity law. ^[12]

AP's reporting on 16 September 2026 describes more visible defiance and a retreat in enforcement amid war and economic pressure. Uneven enforcement is not legal equality or a dependable guarantee against prosecution. ^[13]

AP documented singer Parastoo Ahmady's December 2024 arrest after an online concert without a hijab. ^[14] The Guardian reported in June 2026 that she had been sentenced to 74 lashes. ^[15]

DANCING IS EXPRESSION

HRW documented the 2018 detention of Maedeh Hojabri and Elnaz Ghasemi after they posted dance videos. These were historical online-expression cases, not verified instances of a new 2026 street-dancing prosecution. Ghasemi was visiting from Canada. Their cases show how cultural expression can expose people, including returnees, to coercion. ^[16]

06 / PEOPLE BEHIND THE RECORD

Names, not abstractions

Selected cases. The dates below identify the evidence, not an assumed current legal status.

JINA / MAHSA AMINI

Death in custody, September 2022

The UN probe concluded that physical violence in state custody caused Mahsa (Jina) Amini's death. Her detention concerned compulsory hijab. The finding anchors a rights issue in a named life. [17]

PAKSHAN AZIZI

Humanitarian worker; death sentence

Amnesty condemned the death sentence against this Kurdish humanitarian worker and called for it to be quashed in February 2025. Its 2026 Norway campaign continued to name her among people at risk. This edition makes no claim of a later execution. [18][36]

PARASTOO AHMADY

Singer; prosecution for expression

AP reported her arrest in December 2024 after an online concert without compulsory hijab. The case connects restrictions on women's dress with restrictions on their public voice. [14]

MARZIEH NAYERI

Execution reported: 8 August 2026

Iran Human Rights reports that Nayeri was executed in Qazvin at 24 after a murder conviction. It describes forced marriage at 17 and a rejected self-defence account involving attempted sexual assault. These circumstances are attributed to the monitor. [8]

SALEH MOHAMMADI

Execution reported: 19 March 2026

AP reported the hanging of the young wrestler with Mehdi Qasemi and Saeed Davoudi in Qom on allegations of killing police officers. Amnesty criticized the proceedings as grossly unfair and reliant on coerced confessions. [35]

AMIR RAISIAN & MILAD PANAHIPOUR

Lawyers; reported summons, April 2026

Amnesty reported that the lawyers were summoned after raising due-process concerns for their client Ehsan Hosseinipour Hesarloo. The case illustrates pressure on the defence itself, not just on defendants. [34]

07 / LIVES ACROSS BORDERS

Around eight million. Many different lives.

A broad diaspora estimate includes communities and descendants across generations.

~8 million

Broad diaspora estimate; not a verified global census.

A 2026 Iranian Studies introduction discusses estimates of six to eight million advanced by diaspora leaders and community organizations. This report uses around eight million as the upper end of that broad estimate, with the uncertainty explicit. [22]

A diaspora can include descendants born abroad and people with multiple nationalities. It is broader than a count of people born in Iran who migrated. No single figure describes everyone's relationship to the country.

ALAJ: SURVEILLANCE OF THE DIASPORA www.alajgroup.ir

Iran International and IranWire describe Alaj as a platform promoted by state media to gather information about opponents overseas, including personal and family details, for potential judicial referral. [37][38]

Targeting peaceful critics and exposing relatives to intimidation conflicts with ICCPR Articles 19 and 17. Articles 21 and 22 protect peaceful assembly and association. Restrictions must be lawful, necessary and proportionate. This report condemns reprisals against dissent; a “traitor” label is not proof of a crime. [32]

FDD examines Alaj as part of transnational repression. Its policy analysis is not a court finding. Platform ownership and internal operations were not independently audited. [39]

A right to speak does not end at a border.

Return risks depend on the individual. Documented cases justify serious concern for dissidents, but do not establish that all diaspora members are stranded or face execution on return.

08 / CASE FILE

Ali Zarei

A return to Iran followed by a reported death sentence.

Ali Zarei, identified in HRANA's 1 September 2026 report. Published HRANA composite; photographer unspecified. Editorial reproduction; no image-based inference. [23]

HRANA identifies Zarei as a 2022 protester with an eye injury, sentenced for “corruption on earth”. RFE/RL also reported the case, citing HRANA.

[23][24]

His audio message reportedly says the sentence was upheld. The judgment was not obtained for this report. The claim that he returned to visit an elderly, ill mother remains unverified. [25]

28 APRIL

Reported arrest after returning from Germany.

23 AUGUST

Death sentence reportedly communicated.

21 SEPTEMBER

Reported transfer to solitary confinement; reason unknown. [23][25]

Other return and detention cases

Amnesty documents the death sentence and unfair trial of Swedish-Iranian academic Ahmadreza Djalali, detained in 2016. Its 2026 campaign continues to name him as at risk. [26][36]

Nazanin Zaghari-Ratcliffe was detained during a family visit in 2016 and released in 2022. Amnesty concluded that her treatment amounted to hostage-taking. These distinct cases illustrate the risks without equating every returnee's circumstances. [27]

Case status: public reporting reviewed through 23 September 2026. Reporting a charge does not endorse it or establish guilt.

09 / READING THE NEW REPORT

Crimes against humanity: the period matters

Amnesty's September 2026 publication investigates the 2022 Woman Life Freedom uprising.

Published on 16 September 2026, Architects of Atrocities concludes that authorities committed crimes against humanity to suppress the uprising between September and December 2022. Publication year and the period under investigation must not be confused. [28]

Amnesty identifies murder, torture, enforced disappearance, imprisonment, rape and persecution. Its accompanying account describes a state policy implemented through security bodies and a chain of command, with discriminatory persecution of Kurdish and Baluchi protesters. [29]

The organization identifies 87 officials for criminal investigation. This is a call to investigate individual responsibility, not a finding that a court has convicted all 87. It seeks international accountability, including an ICC referral and an international criminal justice mechanism. [28][29]

officials identified for criminal investigation

A companion record:
377 deaths, including
56 children.

A documented set of cases, not a 2026 death toll. [30]

FROM CONDEMNATION TO JUSTICE

International human-rights organizations and governments should move beyond condemnation: fund evidence preservation, protect witnesses and support independent criminal investigations. Competent national courts should examine cases under applicable extraterritorial or universal-jurisdiction laws; governments should pursue lawful international accountability mechanisms, including the proposed Security Council referral to the ICC. [28][33]

The goal is to bring those criminally responsible to justice in fair proceedings. Individual guilt must be proved; the report's conclusions are not convictions. Amnesty's new investigation concerns the 2022 uprising, not a final tally for January 2026. [29][30]

10 / POLITICAL PRISONERS

Keep the name. Preserve the evidence.

www.humaninchain.org

HumanInChain

DOCUMENT · VERIFY · AMPLIFY

FOR TRUTH, MEMORY AND LIFE

Every case is a human life.

HumanInChain carefully and securely documents names, testimony and evidence concerning capital punishment and human-rights violations in Iran - so truth is not lost and action remains possible.

English homepage text reproduced from the site's supplied English copy. This is an editorial reproduction, not a live screenshot; the language switch was unavailable during capture.

HumanInChain describes a mission to preserve names, testimony and evidence of executions and human-rights violations in Iran. It offers a case archive, source-based news and an evidence atlas. [31]

Its stated safeguards include human review and consent before publication. This report does not certify its security or treat its homepage totals as independently verified.

Why a prisoner register matters

A reliable record links an individual to an arrest date, court, charge, lawyer and dated status. Preserve original sources and corrections.

People before publicity

Seek informed consent, protect witnesses and keep sensitive evidence separate from public summaries. A campaign must not expose families to further harm.

11 / A LEGAL RESPONSE

Rights require remedies

Accountability must be evidence-based, individual and consistent across all actors.

Protect life and due process

The ICCPR protects life, liberty, fair trial and freedom from torture. It also protects expression, peaceful assembly and equality. A security accusation does not displace these guarantees. Article 6 prohibits imposing death sentences for offences committed below age 18. [32]

Investigate before attributing guilt

Crimes against humanity have specific contextual elements. Individual and command responsibility require evidence of the relevant legal elements; allegations, sanctions designations and investigative findings are not interchangeable with a conviction. [33]

Preserve a route to justice

The ICC's jurisdiction depends on legal gateways, including those in Articles 12 and 13 of the Rome Statute. Amnesty's request for a Security Council referral is a proposal for action, not notice that an ICC case has begun. Domestic prosecutions under extraterritorial jurisdiction depend on each state's law.

[28][33]

PRIORITIES FOR A PEOPLE-CENTRED RESPONSE

1. Halt executions and review capital cases against fair-trial standards.
2. Release people detained solely for peacefully exercising their rights.
3. Protect access to independent lawyers and necessary medical care.
4. Preserve evidence and protect victims, families and witnesses.
5. Support independent investigations and effective reparations.
6. Protect civilians from violations by every party to armed conflict.

The priorities are this report's editorial recommendations, grounded in the cited rights framework. This is general legal information, not individual case advice.

12 / THE MACHINERY OF PUNISHMENT

Behind prison walls

Repeated executions of protesters demand scrutiny beyond official announcements.

72 of 82

August executions were not officially announced, according to Iran Human Rights. [8]

Silence in official media is not evidence that a person remains alive. Monitors often establish executions through families, lawyers and other sources. But an unannounced execution, a secret execution and an unresolved disappearance remain different evidentiary categories.

1 June 2026

Amnesty reports that Ashkan Maleki and Mehrdad Mohammadinia were executed secretly, without advance notification to their lawyers or families. [11]

28 July 2026

Amnesty identifies Amir Hossein Safari and Abolfazl Sepahi as publicly executed protesters. Concealment is not the only instrument of repression; public punishment can also intimidate. [11]

Daily and weekly: what can be said?

The documented cases show recurring executions across months. A monthly total does not prove that a dissident was executed every day or every week. Many recorded executions concern other charges; those lives also require protection.

The obligation to disclose

Authorities should publish complete execution records, identify detention locations, notify families and counsel, and permit independent scrutiny. Allegations of killings in custody require prompt, impartial investigation.

The right to life and fair trial applies to every prisoner. Torture-tainted confessions and proceedings that deny an effective defence cannot be treated as justice. [32]

This chapter concerns documented executions and reporting gaps. It does not convert every missing-person case into a confirmed killing.

13 / VIOLENCE IN CUSTODY

Sexual violence demands an independent investigation

Survivors deserve protection, medical care and justice. Serious allegations require precise reporting.

An established record from 2022

Amnesty's December 2023 investigation documented rape and other sexual violence against 45 survivors of the 2022 crackdown, including women, men and children. It examined testimony and available supporting material. These findings concern 2022, not January 2026. [41]

Reported assaults after January 2026

Iran International reported on 15 March that two nurses detained after treating wounded protesters were raped in custody. Its sources remained anonymous for fear of reprisals. This edition has not independently verified the allegations. [40]

Witness allegations - unverified

Several female detainees allegedly had their wombs removed after being sexually assaulted and murdered inside detention centres run by the Islamic Republic. Witnesses reportedly alleged that some of the sexual assaults were committed by members of Hashd al-Shaabi militia groups hired by the Islamic Republic to participate in the crackdown.

These witness-attributed allegations were supplied for this report and have not been independently verified.

Protect survivors. Preserve evidence. Investigate responsibility.

Independent forensic examination, confidential survivor testimony and protected medical records are essential. No survivor should be pressured to disclose a name or repeat traumatic details for publicity.

Non-graphic reporting. ICCPR Article 7 prohibits torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. Allegations are distinguished from judicial findings. [32]

EDITORIAL METHOD

This edition is a desk-based synthesis of public sources, not a new field investigation. Priority was given to UN material, rights monitors, official institutional sources and reputable reporting. Source dates and uncertainty are retained. Named cases are selective, not a complete register.

Publication of an allegation is not proof. State charges are not guilt; NGO findings are not convictions; archival images do not depict current events.

The HRPF report was reviewed for broad editorial inspiration: human-centred stories, clear navigation and concise reporting. Its photographs, substantial text and distinctive layout were not reused. Amnesty coverage relies on the report's official summary, companion record and accompanying findings; it is not a page-by-page audit of the full investigation.

CONCLUSION / A CALL FOR JUSTICE

For the people of Iran.
For a future with justice.

Tehran, 11 May 2024. Ninara / Wikimedia Commons, CC BY 2.0. Archival civilian life; no political activity or victim status is inferred. Cropped with a dark overlay.

IILA encourages human-rights organizations to stand firmly against atrocities committed by the Islamic Republic authorities and to work together to bring those responsible to justice.

Condemnation must lead to action: preserve evidence, protect survivors and witnesses, support independent investigations, and pursue fair prosecutions before competent international and national courts.

When suspects leave Iran, competent authorities should act promptly to seek lawful arrest, extradition or surrender where the evidence, court jurisdiction and applicable immunity rules permit. Travel abroad should not provide impunity. Departure from Iran alone does not create international-court jurisdiction. ^[33]

*Protect the living. Honour the victims.
Bring those responsible to justice.*
